THE GOVERNMENT AND ITS ORGAN.

Nothing shows more clearly the imbecility of the present government than the extraordinary character of its relations with the Colonist. A ring of spikes around the nose of a calf is, under ordinary circumstances, a sure preventive of its thieving propensities, as far as the milk in the cocoa nut is concerned. For close upon three years the Colonist has sucked at the fattening teat of the public treasury, and during all that time, whenever the selfishness of the editor had to be gratified, it has not hesitated to fly in the teeth of the government, and propound theories and advance arguments as wide as the poles are asunder from the government's policy. With these vagaries the spiritless quartette across the bay have complacently borne, well knowing that no other paper in the province would shoulder the burden which the Colonist, with such nonchalance, accepts and pitches into the ditch, whenever it suits its selfish purposes to do so. In a letter which appears in yesterday's issue of the organ, and in which a clumsy attempt is made to conceal the inspiration of brain, the writer appears in his wonted character of "bear." This time he makes a load set at the property of the people; and with all his might and cunning, tries to pave the way for failure in the coming sale of public land at English Bay, and in the consequent displenishment of the provincial money chest. "It's a good time to sell the public land, for in another year or so it will not be saleable at all" says the Colonist. What reasonable being, having any faith in the prognostications of the organ, would risk a dollar in the purchase of these lands? THE TIMES does not share in any such gloomy forebodings, and although we cannot but condemn the land policy of the government, in this instance, we have no desire to gratify our feelings of hostility, by contributing in any way to bring about the result which everyone but the Colonist, would deplore. THE TIMES, despite the insinuations of the Colonist, is always ready to stand by, and defend with a strong voice, the true interests of this city, whenever it is necessary to do so; but it will never descend to the unfair and unpatriotic course of depreciating, for the sake of party triumph, and for less, for any sinister or selfish purpose, the property of the people. The course which the organ has pursued in this matter is in complete harmony with its selfish nature, and the torture inflicted by its spikes is richly deserved by the government, who, for the meekness with which they submit to the ordeal, merit the condemnation and contempt of all honest and high-spirited men.

THE QUICKEST ON RECORD.

Naval Supplies Delivered at Esquimalt in Fifteen Days from Liverpool.

Importance of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the British Government.

While Mr. Van Horne was in this city he stated to a TIMES representative that the first shipment of through freight from Liverpool to Victoria was then on its way across the Atlantic in the shape of a car load of naval supplies. The shipment was made by the Admiralty with the view of testing the capabilities of the route in the event of hostilities with a foreign power, for transportation purposes. The shipment in question reached Halifax in less than seven days after leaving Liverpool, from thence it was transferred to the Intercolonial railway. The car reached Quebec at nine o'clock last Monday morning, the 16th instant, where it was dispatched on its long run of over 2300 miles over the C. P. R. reaching Port Moody last evening, where the Alexander was lying to wait to receive the consignment on arrival of the train. The Alexander shortly after 3 o'clock this morning landed the stores at the Naval dock at Esquimalt. The running time from Quebec to Victoria, including stoppages for change of locomotives, engineers, firemen, and conductors, was less than 102 hours and from Liverpool the trip was made in less than 160 hours—13 days. For freight this is an unparalleled feat. The quickest known period for mail matter has been 16 days, while Mr. Smith, Manager of the Hudson Bay Company made the journey from London in 14½ days, via New York. This truly is a wonderful change in our relations with the capital of the empire. When the ballasting of the C. P. R. is completed it is asserted that London letters will be delivered in Victoria on the 12th day out. The authorities may well feel elated over the success of the test.

Mr. Reid, master mechanic at Winnipeg, had charge of the train. He comes to the coast as one of the parties appointed to value the Onderdonk plant, which according to the terms of his contract with the government, Mr. Onderdonk is about to hand over to the Dominion at a valuation. This work will be proceeded with at once. Mr. Haney will act on behalf of Mr. Onderdonk, but the name of the government appraiser we have not learned.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla works directly and promptly, to purify and enrich the blood, improve the appetite, strengthen the nerves and tones up the system. It is in the truest sense an alterative medicine. Every invalid should give it a trial.

If people troubled with colds, would take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral before going to church or places of entertainment they would avoid coughing, greatly to the comfort of both speakers and hearers. Public speakers and singers find that the Pectoral wonderfully increases the power and flexibility of the voice.

NATURE VS. MAN

Along the Line of the Canadian Pacific—Difficulties and Dangers.

Man's Triumph Over Nature—Peaks and Precipices—Rivers and Canyons.

A correspondent writing to the London Free Press, from Donald station, the present western terminus of the C. P. R., in the mountains describes that place as a mere way side station, with but one hotel. Donald is 2500 feet above the level of the sea. At this point the track crosses the Columbia and runs along the west bank for 12 miles to the crossing of the Beaver, which is followed about 20 miles. The ascent up this stream is 117 feet per mile. A "Mogul," seventy tons in weight is attached to push up this grade. The mountain peaks along the Columbia are not above two or three thousand feet high, but as we ascend the Beaver they gradually increase, and are generally clothed with verdure to their summits. The pass is very narrow, and the banks of the river very high, in places three or four hundred feet above the bed of the stream. Very heavy cuttings of both rock and earth are required, and in some of these latter the natural inclination of repose has not been attained, so that slides are to be feared. Several mountain streams descend from the peaks on either hand, and after many a full down their precipitous sides, join the river below. A number of wooden bridges are necessary to cross the path of these torrents, two of them especially being of great length and height. The bridge over Stoney Creek is 500 feet long and 298 feet high, being

THE HIGHEST WOODEN BRIDGE IN THE WORLD.

The curved bridge over Mountain Creek is 1071 feet long, has a central span of 149 feet, is 143 feet high in the centre and contains 1,300,000 feet of lumber, board measure. Barrels of water, kept constantly full are placed at intervals along the whole of the bridges to provide against accidents from fire. Apart from this danger they are safe and strongly built. Though our train was a very heavy one it shook them so little in crossing that scarcely a ripple was caused in the water in those barrels. Just west of Stoney Creek is a very deep earth cutting where a tunnel would be preferable; the wall left is so high and so near a perpendicular that the vibration of passing trains causes loose earth and stones to descend. While we were passing, a boulder, over a hundred pounds in weight, fell from a great height, rolled on the track, and struck the rear engine, causing a stop to ascertain what damage had been done. Surprise Creek, Six-mile Creek, and Cascade Creek are rapid streams and are also bridged. At about twenty miles from the Columbia Bear Creek, a small stream running from the summit, meets the Beaver at nearly right angles, into which it empties its water by a beautiful fall one hundred and fifty feet high. The road here turns into the Bear Creek ravine, and follows its easterly bank to the summit, six miles away, through

A SUBSIDENT OF UNPARALLELED GRANDEUR.

The pass is a very narrow one. On its western side a mountain ridge runs down to the edge of the ravine, and fir trees grow up to its summit, two miles away, their tops apparently as smooth as if trimmed by a gardener. This ridge is about half a mile in height, terminating in a dome of perpendicular gray slate 900 feet above the level of the sea. This is Mount Carroll, which derives its name from a chain-bearer in the employ of Major Rogers, who first explored this pass. Carroll, who now lives in St. Catharines, Ontario, being wearied with his labors in climbing over the rough mountain spurs, concluded that he was doing all the work and his employer getting all the pay and all the glory, and complained of this unequal division. The major, who was quite a humorist, said:—"Jack, I'll not divide the money with you, but I'll share the glory, and give you that grand mountain of the invaluable services you have rendered your country." Accordingly, he entered the ridge on his plans as Mount Carroll. Opposite this, on the east side of the ravine, is a peak called Mount

CANADA ABROAD.

The Northwest and British Columbia to be the Future Supply for Seed Wheat.

The Montreal Witness says that last winter the Canadian Pacific railway exhibition car distributed some 65,000 small packages of wheat, each weighing exactly two and a quarter ounces, well filled, to different farmers in the eastern and lower provinces, requesting them to sow the grains and watch the result. The average result has been one peck of wheat harvested from the seed contained in each of these packages, or from 15 lbs. to 16 lbs., from 2¼ ozs. of seed, thus proving that the change of seed from the climate of the far west to the east has been productive of the best results. It is considered probable that in the future the wheat seed from the Canadian Northwest and British Columbia will be the favorite seed for European countries. The fact of Canada carrying away the highest distinctions and medals for grains at the Antwerp exhibition has created a large demand for samples of Canadian grain to be experimented upon in different European countries. Among others application has been made by Li Commendatore Neuroglia on behalf of the Italian government, by Dr. Willmash professor of botany at the Royal Agricultural College, Berlin, as well as by a society on behalf of King Oscar of Norway. Throughout there is a general desire to give Canadian wheat a trial, if not a preference, and if is fair to predict that the Canadian Northwest will shortly become one of the greatest, if not the greatest, wheat supplying centre for the world.

CONGRATULATIONS

To Sir John Macdonald on Completion of C. P. R.

From Craigellachie, Mr. W. C. Van Horne sent the following congratulatory telegram to the Dominion Premier on the 7th. Thanks to your far seeing policy and unwavering support, the Canadian Pacific Railway is completed. The last rail was laid this [Saturday] morning at 9:22 o'clock.

Mr. Sandford Fleming, from North Bend telegraphed the premier:

The first through train from Montreal to Vancouver is approaching Yale and within twenty-four hours of the Pacific coast. The last spike was driven this morning by Hon. Donald A. Smith, at Craigellachie, in the Eagle Pass, three hundred and forty miles from Port Moody. On reaching the coast our running time from Montreal, including ordinary stoppages, will be exactly five days, averaging twenty-four miles an hour. Before long passenger trains may run over the railway from Montreal to Vancouver in four days, and it will be possible to travel specially from Liverpool to the Pacific coast by the transcontinental line in ten days. We are greatly pleased with the work done. It is impossible to realize the enormous physical and other difficulties which have been overcome with such marvellous rapidity and with results so satisfactory.

The Hon. William Smithe, premier of British Columbia, sent the following message: I congratulate you most heartily on the completion of the transcontinental railway on Canadian soil. May it prove a permanent bond of union between the eastern and western portions of this great Dominion.

BARON STRATHNAIRN'S DEATH.

Baron Strathnairn, better known as General Sir Hugh Rose, a name which will descend to future ages side-by-side with that other celebrated Scotchman, Lord Clyde (Sir Colin Campbell), is that great chapter of horrors, the Indian Sepoy Mutiny, died recently. He was a son of Sir George Henry Rose, an M. P., and for some time ambassador at Berlin. When only 17 he entered a British Foot regiment as ensign. By 1850 he had risen to the rank of major, and in 1851 became a lieut.-colonel. For his services in the Crimea he was promoted major-general in 1854, and in 1855 received the honor of knighthood, while France made him a commander of the Legion of Honor. He served with distinction in India, for which he received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, several decorations, and succeeded Lord Clyde as commander-in-chief. The University of Oxford conferred on him the degree of D. C. L., and in 1860 the Queen raised him to the Peerage under the title of Baron Strathnairn of Strathnairn and of Jhansi, East Indies. In 1877 he was made a field marshall, the highest rank except that of commander-in-chief in the service. Baron Strathnairn was never married, and so with his death the baronet becomes extinct. He was the brother of the grandfather of Mrs. A. C. Steele, of Guelph, and he leaves no heirs but a maiden sister in England, and a few Canadian relatives. The deceased Baron is reported to have been very wealthy and to have left three estates, one in England, one in Scotland, and one in Ireland, in addition to a London residence. Mr. A. C. Steele, whose wife is an heir to these large estates, was a resident of Victoria last winter and spring, having come to the Pacific coast for the benefit of his health. He sought rest at Esquimalt for several months and returned east early in the summer to complete his legal studies. His friends here will be pleased to learn that his wife's portion of the Baron's inheritance will be a large one.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC.

The Greatest Work Ever Accomplished Under the British Flag.

Even in Canada we are accustomed to speak of the Canadian Pacific railway as Canada's greatest work. We must not be surprised if foreigners and the people of the mother country are content to refer to the undertaking in the same strain. But a correspondent of the London Echo calls attention to the fact that this is very far short of the truth. "Let me tell you," he says, "that it is not alone Canada's greatest work, but the greatest work ever done under the British flag, or any other flag, or by any other people in any time, unless perchance the Chinese wall might be held to vie with it. We are disposed over here to be a little angry at having our national road continually referred to as a very creditable thing for Canada to have done, as Canada's greatest work, as the 'most important work yet done in the colonies,' as a 'work equal to anything yet done in the United States,' etc., etc., as is the habit of the London press, when, in fact, whether it be considered from an engineering, military, or political point of view, it is at least three time as important as any other work in the British empire, or in the United States."

COWICHAN LAKE.

Coun. W. A. Robertson and Mr. J. C. Blackett returned to the city from a trip to Cowichan lake yesterday morning, bringing specimens of quartz for assaying, of which there is great abundance in that locality and perfectly accessible. There are over a dozen settlers in that section, many of them are erecting buildings. They also came across a few in search of land of which they discovered a large quantity, each of the party drove an express waggon to the lake, being the first that ever entered there. They found provender for their horse scarce, all available to the land "boxes" and the price having advanced from 5c. to 12½c. per sheaf, at which prices farmers should make a fortune in a short time. The trail they found to be in not a good condition, for in some sections they found an impassable morass. The mosquitoes of the trail they found to be most remarkable. They were not fortunate as to obtain a glimpse of the sea serpent, but they heard of its having been seen. There are some thirteen shermen amongst the Nitanaksis Indians, requiring the attention of the department, for advance of settlement, otherwise troubles may follow. With the exception of one Indian and his squaw, they belong to a foreign tribe and are very hostile, some even threatening the life of any who will annoy them. Deer and game are very plentiful. They found one Indian killing deer simply for their skin, a practice that should be stopped. He avers that it is his determination not to leave a deer for the white settler. The weather was wet and disagreeable, snow on the mountains and the water in the lake very high.

GLADSTONE IN THE NORTH.

MR. GLADSTONE'S well founded reliance upon Scottish enthusiasm shows that he is not Anglicised in blood, although he may be in manner. Said LORD BYRON: "I am half Scotch by blood and all Scotch by rearing," and although that lordly poet satirized both the Scotch and the English, and diverted his more generous feelings to the Irish, the Italians and the Greeks, because he thought these peoples stood in need of somebody's generosity, he never forgot the high hills and deep tarns of his childhood. MR. GLADSTONE possesses the poetic temperament—source of his power and author of his weakness. When he contemplates a supreme campaign effort he repairs to Scotland and finds there his native element, like the fabled demigod, who could dwell apart in space for a time, but who was ever and anon constrained to renew his strength by retouching his mother earth.

It was from Scottish heights that GLADSTONE hurled the bolts which smote BEACONSFIELD in his highest flight, and it is from the same vantage ground that he now aims his oratorical missiles at SALISBURY. He finds much to encourage and inspire him in the "north countrie." The majority of the Scottish people are Liberals in politics, though in many other things more illiberal than the admirers of their sterling qualities of head and heart could wish them. There are Conservatives, too, in Scotland, just as there are Scotch Conservatives in Canada, and though greatly outnumbered in the old land they are never disheartened or dismayed. The oftener a Scotch Conservative is defeated the more Conservative he becomes. They are generally adherents of the OLD KIRK, and it is with them that MR. GLADSTONE has to reckon as he makes his triumphal progress through the "land o'cakes."

That he feels this to be the fact is evidenced by the way he hedged upon the church question in his Edinburgh speech. A notable feature of that speech is the space devoted to the denial of campaign lies against himself which he could have afforded to ignore, because nobody believed or paid the slightest attention to them. He had an object in emphasizing his personal grievance, as though he were a weakling struggling for fair play, and not the giant that he is, demanding supremacy. Commencing his career as a Tory and a high churchman of the highest type, the DEMOSTHENES of his time became a Liberal. There is no reproach involved in this. Every man is at liberty to change his opinions, except the man who has no opinions to change. MR. GLADSTONE is not that kind of a man. Having changed his opinions he did as all converts do, and became more liberal than the Liberals. While in this mood he committed himself to the principle that churches ought to be supported on the voluntary plan. Later on he put this principle into practice by disestablishing the Irish church, pleading that the Clerkenwell explosion had brought the Irish church question within the purview of practical politics. Not a very happy explanation, as it implies that the blowing up of a few buildings in England and Scotland would compel the disestablishment of the kirk and of the church as by law established. But at Edinburgh he failed to say that he proposed to blow up the established churches of Great Britain. His was ambiguous—even disingenuous. He weakened perceptibly. Though the old Irish Conservatives are in a minority, he had to reckon with them, and he had to reckon also with the established church of England, the influence of which he is not prepared to defy. In this sense, and upon this question MR. GLADSTONE falls far below himself.

The annual report of the operations of the United States Hydrographic Office, made by Commander BARTLETT, have been published. The value of the use of oil to smooth breaking seas during gales of wind, the report says, has been widely diffused, and the account of different experiments published monthly on the pilot chart has been exceedingly interesting.

SERVIA AND BULGARIA.

The Servia-Bulgarian conflict is at present attracting much attention throughout the world. Writing from the seat of war a correspondent says: As we approached Servia a band of Bulgarian peasants joined us on their way to the scene of action. Vidin, the first Bulgarian station, the scene began to grow more serious. A long line of soldiers was drawn up along the street facing the river and the landing was packed with the excited crowd. A corps of volunteers came aboard and the exchange of patriotic sentiments did not cease till long after we were steering on our course. At Lom Palanka, Rahora and Nipopoli the same scene was repeated. About this time we passed several barges filled with troops pushing towards the frontier. At Siston there was a perfect storm of excitement. The whole town came out to welcome our steamer, which by this time was gay with flags and uniforms. At the landing a speech was made to the recruits sent off, and obstreperous songs were sung in which "Bulgaria" and a "March, march" came in frequent refrain. Landing at Rustchuk I found the square in front of the municipal building filled with raw recruits drilling. Thus it was over the young principality. A trip through the interior of Varan discovered to me the same enthusiasm. Since the day that PRINCE ALEXANDER issued his ukase, mobilized the army and set out for Philippopolis, the Bulgarians north of the Balkans have taken up the cause of their brethren in Eastern Roumelia with an earnestness that shows how vigorous the racial and national feeling is becoming. The Prince, who has hitherto had a strong Russian party amongst the Bulgarians against him, is suddenly the hero of the hour. The agents of a Bible society in Bulgaria, who generally find at this season their readiest sales, are met everywhere with the retort, "We do not want books now; we want guns and swords." The young nation is beginning to feel its strength. The six years of rule of PRINCE ALEXANDER in Bulgaria have been years of uninterrupted progress; not a progress in the American sense of a leap forward, but none the less a progress. It must be remembered that the Bulgarians became their own masters suddenly after four centuries of Turkish misrule. The change was about as radical as that experienced by the negroes of our country. The Bulgarians are as yet but little more than a nation of children. On the battlefields of the late war the country suffered terribly in every way. Hence the progress has been of that fundamental character which does not appear at the surface. It has been a sort of recovery. As we have seen, the idea of nationality has asserted itself more and more. Schools have been established in all important centres, and the foundations of a future national system laid. It is probable that at the beginning of this period hardly 500,000 people out of the two millions of Bulgaria could read and write. In country places the school master was the only one who could write, and he was scribe for the neighborhood. The new educational methods are slowly changing this, although the grade of teacher is very inferior. The graduates of Robert College are coming to the front, and foreign aid is being called in. The cities of Bulgaria are in a wretched condition. Even public buildings are hardly respectable, and the sanitary conditions of the larger towns are simply abominable. In this city of Rustchuk the streets are as rough as ordinary mountain roads. In the rural districts the old Slav commerce system still holds. The land, being of naturally good soil, is never fertilized, and the crudest instruments are used in working it up. The peasants live in the most squalid poverty in mud huts. Twenty-six per cent of the inhabitants of Bulgaria are Moslems, who are, as a general rule, suffering as much persecution as the Christians did under Turkish dominion. The district of East Roumelia, which, with the consent of the powers of Europe, will be joined to Bulgaria, will bring that principality 13,500 square miles of territory, and nearly a million of people. But the addition will be much more significant than its acres or population would indicate. A united Bulgaria with a national feeling formed to a white heat, with a growing jealousy of foreign intervention, means that what has been a pliant instrument is liable to become an arm to strike. It is well established that this movement comes from within, and burst out unexpectedly to Russia. In fact, there is at present a strong reactionary movement against Russia. The Russian officers have resigned their commissions in the army. Threatening language against the Prince on the part of these officers caused them to receive notice to quit the country. It is true that without the Russian officers in this crisis the Bulgarian army is totally unable to do anything of importance in the field. Austria is quite ready to step in and supply the deficiency if the way opens. The representative of the London Times seemed inclined to put the matter in this way: Turkey is about to go to pieces, and her territories must fall to the lot of one of the surrounding countries. Bulgaria, just at present, by asserting so vigorously a national independent existence, is pushing into the front ranks of the competitors for European territories.

ALL the signs indicate that Canada is going to loom up largely at the colonial exhibition. The fact that we asked for and have been granted a larger space than was originally allotted us is an evidence of that. It would be difficult to overrate the importance of this country of a brilliant success at the exhibition, and we believe that such a success is now pretty well assured. Let no pains be spared to put it beyond a peradventure.

SLIGHTLY FORGETFUL.

While the younger Rouges to a man, favor Canadian independence, the English speaking Reformers of Montreal incline to annexation, as their fathers did in 1849.—Toronto Mail.

THE TIMES does not profess to take much interest in dead issues, for there is a sufficiency of living ones requiring attention, but our love for historical accuracy impels us to assert that the Mail has on this occasion "put its foot in it." If our recollection of the troublous times of 1848-9 is correct, it was the British American League, composed of much the same crowd that had mobbed the Governor-General, the late LORD ELGIN, in Montreal, burned the Parliament buildings in that city and hoisted the black flag in his face at Brockville, when proceeding to Upper Canada. The annexation manifesto was signed by the late SIR GEO. E. CARTIER, as well as by (afterwards SIR) A. T. GALT, MR. (now SIR) D. L. MACPHERSON and the MR. JOHN ROSS, now SIR JOHN ROSS, of MORVEN, ROSS & Co., financial agents, London. These gentlemen were certainly no friends of the Liberal BALDWIN-LAFONTAINE administration of that time. The gentlemen named have always been reported as stanch supporters of annexation; but we have never yet observed their being referred to as "vile Grits." The Mail has evidently forgotten the early history of its party and that of old Canada.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE police of Birmingham are making a vigorous crusade against the houses of ill-fame in that city. Whole streets have been cleared of their disreputable inhabitants, and many of them have been punished severely, as the magistrates are heartily co-operating with the police. Some of the Birmithamites, however, complain that the police are careful not to disturb the fashionable places of illicit resort.

THE excitement throughout the United Kingdom over MR. GLADSTONE'S recent Edinburgh speech, is intense. It is the common theme of discussion to-day from club to pot-house, and, as in a polemical debate, while both parties appeal to the same text, the interpretations are widely divergent. I have learned that MR. GLADSTONE this morning displayed a feverish anxiety to see the city and Glasgow papers at the earliest possible moment, and the result was far from pleasing.

OUR esteemed contemporary, the Mail, explains that SIR JOHN'S object in passing his franchise bill was to "frustrate a grit trick." Great minds run in similar channels. It was a desire to frustrate the trick of putting an opposition king on the throne of England that induced GUY FAWKES to crawl into the parliamentary cellar. He honestly wished to give parliament a lift. But poor old Guy had no organ to explain his good intentions. He had nothing but a dark lantern, and that threw so little light upon the subject that he was defeated by a crushing majority. So says the Toronto World.

THE fact of Canada carrying away the highest distinctions and medals for grains at the Antwerp Exhibition has created a large demand for samples of Canadian grain to be experimented upon in different European countries. Among others application has been made by H. CAMERON SENATOR NEBRASKA on behalf of the Italian government, by DR. WILLMACK, Professor of botany at the Royal Agricultural College, Berlin, as well as by a society on behalf of KING OSCAR of Norway. Throughout there is a general desire to give Canadian wheat a trial, if not a preference, and it is fair to predict that the Canadian Northwest will shortly become one of the greatest, if not the greatest, wheat supplying centre of the world.

IT is reported that MR. GLADSTONE, upon perusing the editorial comments of the Scotch Liberal press upon his Edinburgh speech, became greatly excited. He expressed himself as shocked by the disloyalty to the Liberal party and said he had hoped for great results from the speech in the way of unifying the Liberals, but that these hopes would be disappointed if the Liberal editors refused to co-operate. The situation as revealed in Scotland on MR. GLADSTONE'S arrival was discouraging. Already Liberal Churchmen were opposing Radical disestablishers in a score of Scotch constituencies, and the number is likely to be largely increased. The Conservatives are eagerly utilizing these splits in the hope of slipping in their candidates. It was believed that the ex-Premier's speech would have healed all differences, and enabled the Liberals to present an unbroken front to their opponents. But the effort has been a disappointment, and the Conservatives are correspondingly jubilant.

"Baxter's Barley-Bree"

THIS well-known and justly celebrated Brand of Old Scotch Whisky is never sent out from the Proprietor's Bonded Warehouse till it has attained an age of at least Seven Years. It is especially recommended for its purity, mellowness, and delicacy of flavour, rendering it unequalled as a beverage. The following Certificate of Purity, under the Act of Parliament of 1879, is a recent Report upon it:—

LABORATORY OF PUBLIC ANALYST,
Dundee, 15th June, 1885.

"I have examined a sample of 'D. R. Baxter's Barley-Bree' Scotch Whisky, and find it genuine, carefully free from poisonous oil, the properties of a First Class Scotch Whisky. It has a moderate amount of spirit, and is free from Fusel Oil. I consider this Whisky of excellent quality. It is evidently thoroughly matured."

Signed, G. D. MACDOUGALD,
Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry, Public Analyst for the County of Perth, and the Burghs of Dundee, Forfar, Montrose, and Arbroath.

The Public should insist upon getting their Whisky and should not allow any other Whisky will find it the best and purest sample.

UNLUCKY THIRTEEN.

[Constance A. M. Cotterell.]

I am a jealous man. There is no use in attempting to deny it; but to-night there will be, there can be, no one of whom I need be jealous. Lord MacPhoole certainly—but—

Here Jenkyns throws open the drawing-room door and announces me: "Mr. Trevor."

"Oh, Trevor, how d'ye do?" says my host, laying his hand on my shoulder.

I shrink inwardly from his touch, but I smile politely; for though I hate the old man, I love his daughter.

"I believe we shall be thirteen," he goes on. "Kent has failed us at the last moment. But you don't mind, do you?"

I protest I have not the slightest objection.

"No, I thought not," says Mr. Bellaire, with a horrid smile—in any one else but his daughter's father, a disgusting leer. "Superstition is the last thing you young men go in for nowadays, eh?"

I assent to this original proposition.

"Somebody was saying, just before you came in, that Trevor fought shy of thirteen at dinner. But you say you don't?"

From my elf nurse I imbibed many curious superstitious horrors, of which I have never been able to rid myself, but how can I confess to this ogre? I boldly deny any such weakness, and, to my unutterable relief, he moves away.

It is a marvel to me how such a monster can have such a daughter as Evelyn. I think to myself her mother must have been an angel of beauty and goodness, and probably died of horror at a nearer acquaintance with the ogre. I am just settling this question entirely to my own satisfaction, when the door opens. Through my back is turned, I know it is Evelyn. She nods and smiles kindly as she passes me.

For the space of that second I breathe the air of Paradise. But she goes on into the other drawing-room, and I hear her greeting her guests, and laughing and talking gayly. Then I see Lord MacPhoole, whom I detest as cordially as I do her father, bend down and kiss her hand. Then Lady Burliston, a dear old lady, who has been very kind to me, comes in, and Evelyn runs to her, and I see her kiss her withered cheek. Then Mrs. Latimer Kerr, a pretty little widow, comes in, and Evelyn kisses her, and I see Lord MacPhoole bend down and whisper something in her ear, and she laughs and looks down.

"How can I tell?" she murmurs.

I am about to look at any other [illegible] when the voice of the monster is heard through the room, that is to say, he stands about four feet away, and speaks, very loudly, in his ordinary voice, but to me it is a hideous shriek.

"Evelyn," he says, "Lady Burliston wants to hear about Fidèle." With one glance from her blue eyes she goes.

Can she really prefer comparing notes about their wretched little dogs to talking to me? Yet she seems to be very happy with the ancient Lady Burliston. To any thinking "everything in its place" is a very good old saying, and Lady Burliston should have stayed at home in her arm-chair.

But if I can not talk to Evelyn I can look at her. Once her eyes meet mine, and then some one comes in front of her and talks to her. Flesh and blood and broadcloth are, alas, impenetrable.

Here Jenkyns announces dinner, and the ogre suddenly appears before me, saying, "Trevor, will you take Miss Fortescue as well as Mrs. Latimer? Kent was to have taken her in."

Mrs. Latimer is my pet abomination, and the ogre's voice distinctly chuckles as he announces this disagreeable fact. With feelings of angry repugnance I move across the room to the simpering, unconscious Mrs. Latimer, a prattling baby of 23. I take her and Miss Fortescue to the dining-room, and, bearing in mind Mrs. Chalmer's kind prompting, I steer straight to the end of the table. We are just standing in our places, when Miss Fortescue says:

"But surely we are wrong, Mr. Trevor. I am not Lord MacPhoole, and"—looking at my card—"your card is wrong, too."

Then Chalmers was deceiving me, and I am not to sit near her after all! Horror! to be made a fool of in this way. The drops stand on my brow; I look savagely round for the traitor, when it suddenly strikes me we are on the right hand side of the table.

Inspired with fresh hope I say, "I know that we are to sit at this end; suppose we try the other side?"

And, true enough, there we find our names.

I am, with a fearful joy, that Jenkyns has put my name at the top, and left Mrs. Latimer and Miss Fortescue to sit together. Calling down blessings innumerable on his powdered head I take advantage of this arrangement. Thank heaven I gave him a sovereign the other night, although I owed it to my tailor many times over.

We are only just in time, for here Lord MacPhoole, whispering another of his odious jokes as he comes, brings in Evelyn. She gives me a little glance, I fondly hope of pleased surprise, as she sees me next to her.

We are standing, waiting for grace, when that vile monster says from the other end of the table, "Mr. Trevor, we can not allow two ladies to sit together. Will you divide them, please?"

Imploringly do I gaze into that stern monster's eyes, weakly do I half reach out my hand toward my name card as a feeble protest in self-defense but I finally succumb to his inexorable eye, and—Miss Fortescue finds herself next to my good self.

The dam rushes through grace, but he gives me time to pour my disappointment into Evelyn's eyes, and I almost think she is sorry too.

On the strength of this my drooping spirits revive, and I awake to hear Mrs. Latimer asking for the salt. I pass it hastily, and she seizes the occasion of my head's being turned toward her to say:

"I suppose you have heard the latest news?"

"No," I say, indifferently; "social or political?"

"I mean Miss Ballaire' engagement."

"She is not engaged!" I cry, not so much contradicting her as daring her to contradict me.

The man opposite to me stares, recalling me to my senses, and Mrs. Latimer goes on in her most aggravatingly babyish manner: "Oh, yes, haven't you heard to Lord MacPhoole. Isn't it a rather good match?"

There is no speech, scarcely any breath, left to me. Not the slightest answer do I vouchsafe to her, but I turn at once and begin a strict watch. This, then, is the secret of his staying always at her side. The fiend Jenkyns is rampant. Never have I hated a man as I hate MacPhoole.

But I will see for myself. Every look, every expression of hers will I mark. Can she love him, a wind-bag, a red-haired Radical Scotchman? But no, I comfort myself, after a study of his hateful face, that would be impossible.

Suppose she ever to be accursed [illegible] has given an unwilling, helpless assent to him! This is too likely. Wildly do I make plans for rescuing a captive damsel from the foul enchanter. No knight-errant was ever so truly pledged to one service and one mistress as I. None of them ever burned so valiantly against oppression.

I meet a glance from Evelyn's eyes, which read by the light of this new idea, says: "Deliver me." My heart burns fiercely with scorn and rage against Duncan Rufus MacPhoole.

And yet perhaps Mrs. Latimer was wrong after all. Reports are always false. But still she always knows every scrap of gossip, and is generally right.

At this moment he is handing Evelyn a moon-rad. My jealous eyes eagerly look to see if their hands linger in the exchange. Yes! Surely he might have loosed the card quite half a second before he did. I scowl with ineffectual rage.

By this time the fish has gone away, and I have not spoken to Miss Fortescue yet. Here she takes the matter in her own hands.

"I have bought a new pug," she says; "and Evelyn is coming to-morrow to see it. Of course you admire pugs?"

How is it every one can read my precious secret so plainly? I have never mentioned it to any one but Chalmers.

Without the slightest hesitation or compunction do I prejure myself by declaring to her, barely and untruly, that I adore pugs, whereas there is nothing I hate so much, except perhaps MacPhoole and the monster.

For fully five minutes I talk to her out of pure gratitude.

Then I fancy I hear MacPhoole say "Trevor," and he and Evelyn both laugh. I long for the ark times when a look, a term, was provocation enough for a quarrel. Would that my foot were on the neck of my enemy! Gladly would I spring to claim my bride over the reeking bodies of the monster and MacPhoole.

With feverish persistence I watch every movement of Evelyn's. A flower in the front of her gown becomes loose. She takes it off and lays it on the table. MacPhoole picks it up, plays with it a moment, appears to make one of his sickening jokes on it, and finally sticks it in his button-hole. How I restrain myself I don't know. I beg, I burn, to punish him as he deserves. But some last remaining sparks of sanity keep me in my place. Jealousy has always been my bane, but never, never have I suffered the agonies I now endure.

"You aren't a bit like yourself to-night, Mr. Trevor," [illegible] Mrs. Latimer; "you have hardly spoken to me."

I say something. I don't know what.

"I thought, perhaps, you were thinking of some difficult case."

The youngest, the most playful kitten can scratch. I am a briefless barrister! Not that there is the slightest doubt the briefs will pour in some day, only—the shower has not begun yet.

Shaving seen her little heart pierce [illegible] the [illegible], bitchy thing goes on, "Aren't there some stories about the old chambers you can live in?"

I tell her one of the stories that make Mr. Pickwick's blood run cold, clothed in my most harrowing language, well suited to my gloomy state of mind.

Her sweet smiling, sensible face changes—would change color if it could—as I tell the story, but as I finish she says, with a little shrug, "Those ghastly, creepy stories are rather hot tarts, aren't they?"

THE AUTUMN ASSIZES.

MONDAY, Nov. 23.

The Assizes opened at 11 o'clock today, His Lordship Justice Gray presiding. Mr. Justice Crease also occupied a seat on the bench.

The following is the Grand Jury: C W R Thomson, foreman; P R Brown, F S Barnard, J R Mitchell, P J Leach, H Harvey, C Kent, T N Hibben, John Teague, T H Tye, A A Green, A B Gray, Wm Fisher, W Dalby, H E Croasdaile, F A Collier.

His Lordship addressed the Grand Jury, referring at considerable length to the various cases to be heard. The docket was a large one, embracing almost every crime in the calendar, as many as forty cases to be presented. There are a number of charges of personal violence and robbery. Three men are charged with stealing $80 from a companion, and with being in possession of stolen property. Two others are charged with entering premises and stealing, and one named Smith with stealing and drawing a revolver. There are also other cases of larceny; James Wallace, in the Grand Pacific and E. Robson, in the Germania saloon. This goes to show that there is a class of sharpers in the city formerly unknown here. The case of Nicholson, a hack driver, for robbery from the person, is a very serious one. The public have a right to expect that persons in his position should be strictly honest. The case of R. Miller, robbery from the person, also occurred in a saloon, and the proprietors of those houses should be careful to protect their guests. Another case was that of Cosgrove, for assault and robbery from the person of Sinclair, a teacher. In the cases of Sufferin and Martin, stealing from Mr. Thompson's premises, of Elliott for stealing hops from Mr. Beak, and of A. Davis on a similar charge, in clear. The case of John Morries, charged with stealing half a pint of whiskey from freight on a C. P. N. Co.'s steamer is a serious one, as it involves the safety of freight while in the hands of carriers. The evidence appears to be clear against the boys Townsend and Claire, are charged with assaulting a Chinaman with intent to do grevious bodily harm. The writing in the deposition is so bad that it is impossible to decipher it. There are twenty-four cases of larceny to be disposed of altogether, and there is a most disagreeable case against F. M. Yorke for criminal assault. This circumstance is said to have happened in August, while the case was not brought until October, and it seems strange that immediate steps should not have been taken. It was a mistake in the law that the accused in such cases could not give evidence. This should be amended. The only case of murder was that of R. E. Sproule for the murder of T. Hammill, of Kootenay. The evidence though circumstantial, is clear. This case was one of dispute about a mining claim; the evidence would show that Sproule had repeatedly said Hammill should not work on the claim. Parties in the vicinity had heard a rifle shot and Sproule was seen there about that time. There are a number of Chinese cases, and one against Cumyow for forgery. The question in this latter was had King Tye & Co. given Cumyow authority to sign their name. His Lordship referred to the great increase of crime, especially of larceny. Some years ago these cases were unknown and the cause of the increase should be considered. One cause might be the insufficient lighting of the city. Persons who paid taxes had a right to demand that their property should be protected. These were matters for the Grand Jury to consider and they could make such suggestions as they thought would be conducive to the best interests of the city. In the matter of the Chinese cases, where they were between themselves, they should come before a special tribunal and not before the courts where business was detained in consequence. He had referred specially to this matter in the Chinese Commission.

The jury then retired and the court adjourned for one hour,

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The court re-assembled at 1:10.

The first case called was that of Queen vs. Quiniisti, murder. The Attorney-General said the prisoner had been confined in the gaol since last Assizes, when all the evidence was submitted. The crown had since obtained no further evidence and he moved that the prisoner be discharged. Quiniisti then left the dock a free man.

The Grand Jury came into court at 3:15 and returned true bills against Thomas McEwen, feloniously stealing from person; John W. Nettleton, assaulting a constable; John W. Nettleton, arson; Thos. Hampton, stealing; Robert Dickson, stealing; and the court instructed the jury in the case of "Bulldog" Kelly, and pointed out the necessity of bringing in an indictment.

The case against J. W. Nettleton was then taken up and is now proceeding.

Indictments were then presented against John W. Nettleton. The prisoner pleaded "not guilty" to the first count, and "guilty" to the assault on Constable Sheppard.

The Crown not being ready to go on with Nettleton's trial, the Deputy Attorney-General called His Lordship's attention to the case of Regina vs. Jerrard, in the Kelly-Baird murder case.

The case against F. M. York was then brought up but as no true bill had been returned it also had to be postponed.

SIR LEONARD'S GOOD BYE.

Sir Leonard Tilley has addressed a farewell letter to his old constituents. In it he says: "When in 1882 the elections of the city returned me to Parliament for another term, I then intimated to them that it was probably the last time I would be a candidate for their suffrages, but I then hoped that I would be spared and my health permit of my remaining in Parliament and in the government until the next general election. But I had not taken into account the wear and tear to body and mind, to which I would necessarily continue to be subjected in the discharge of my parliamentary and departmental duties. My health was completely broken down last winter, but after a serious operation there was a hope that I might continue my work for a short time longer. I regret that my symptoms of late have been such that I have been forced to the conclusion that my only chance of a measure of health, and possibly a few more years of life, is in taking comparative rest and relief from the mental strain to which I have of late years been subjected." After expressing his regret at his inability to remain in Parliament, he adds: "To say good-bye to the men who have been so true and faithful to me for more than a third of a century is not pleasant, but it must be said my colleagues in the government have placed me in a position where my responsibilities are not great, but where I hope I may still be able to do something for my native province and for my country." British Columbians will join with those in the eastern provinces in wishing Sir Leonard the restoration of his former health and a long life.

Thomas Clayton, felony at the Vancouver House. Mr. Pell appeared for the defence. Remanded until Wednesday, bail being fixed at $200.

John Gisholm, captain of the Daisy; action to recover $4.87 wages due a deckhand. Mr. Hett for the defendant, explained that judgment had being given in the County Court on the 5th of Nov. for all the wages due, this amount among the rest. Adjourned for one week to await the action of the receiver in paying the claims.

Henry Jenkinson, charged with an infraction of the Game Protection Act by being in possession of three pheasants, which are specially protected by the game law. C. J. Phillips said that he was in defendant's house on the 15th and saw four birds; there was a dispute between three or four persons present as to whether they were grouse or pheasants, some contending that they were the one and some that they were the other. He would not swear that they were pheasants. J. J. Russell swore that one of the birds was a pheasant, but was uncertain as to the other two. A. Bowes, who also saw the birds, swore they were grouse. Case dismissed.

Ah Too, on remand, in possession of a quantity of tobacco, supposed to have been stolen. Remanded for one week, same bail being continued.

Mrs. Smithers, drunk; no appearance. Bail ordered to be estreated.

Edward Smith, drunk, fined $5.

Mr. Sam'l. Tuall, advance agent of the Grismer-Davies Combination, arrived in the city to-day.

Starr to-day: Miss Walker, Eva Walker, D G Walker, W E Walker, W Dean, J Johnson, A Brice, D Lambert, A Roble, B Roble, T Gibson, G H Burroughs and wife, S F Hall, W Egenew, T Harkins, Clarke, J T Cadagan; J Anait, Sordon, H Phelan, H A Johnson, T Caron, D Kellogg, one Indian, F Willis, H J Hauson, D B Veasy, N H Gleason, J Roland.

AN INDIAN MURDERER.

Mr. D. H. McNeil, special constable, arrived from Salmon river on Friday, having in charge a Salmon river Indian named Talagubd, and a woman named Allanmouth, arrested for the murder of Quomkuckelakin, which took place at the Salmon river "rancherie" on the 3rd inst. The accused Indian struck the deceased with a piece of iron on the head, and afterwards stabbed him in the throat with a knife. He also stabbed another Indian in the side, but he is slowly recovering, and he also split open the scalp of an Indian woman, who is also recovering. The father of Talagund, in attempting to take the knife from his drunken son, received a severe cut in the hand, and a daughter of the murdered man also received several wounds while trying to get possession of the knife. The arrest caused great excitement in the camp, but Officer McNeil at once took away his prisoner, and lodged him in the Nanaimo gaol.

A NEW JOURNAL.

It will be observed by a statement which appeared in yesterday's issue of the black mailer, that a new journal has made its appearance, entitled Coal Harbor Times. It was not stated by whom, nor in whose interest, the new comer is published. We hope, however, that the publishers will not take it as presumptions if THE TIMES volunteers a bit of advice: Eschew every one who is tainted with Edgar balm or case hardened with patent stone; refrain from crying coke! coke! unless paid to do so. Generally state what you believe to be facts, and don't black mail any one for the purpose of obtaining advertising or collecting "hush money." All of which an honest journal observes.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR.

The mails arriving from the east coast by the Amelia did not reach the Victoria office till 11:15 Saturday evening, yet they were distributed in the private boxes on Sunday morning, and the public wicket was opened by an order placed in the lobby signed by Mr. Wallace, the postmaster. This is an innovation in the public interest which deserves to be appreciated. It is hoped that it will be followed up by information being regularly given at the post office of the arrival, distribution and delivery of letters.

INDIAN CHIEF MURDERED.

A dispatch from Kamloops on Sunday says: Louis, the Kamloops Indian Chief, brings news from Douglas Lake that the chief there, lately appointed it is said, by the influence of Agent Mackay, was shot dead Saturday night by the Thompson Indians at Douglas Lake, who were opposed to the appointment. There were also five other Indians wounded, and further trouble is anticipated, as the Douglas Lake Indians have gone to Quilches in pursuit of the murderers.
